Today I want to tell you three stories from my life. That's it. Just three stories. The first story is about connecting the dots. I dropped out of Reed College after the first 6 months, but then stayed around as a drop-in for another 18 months before I really quit. Looking back, it was one of the best decisions I ever made. I could stop taking the required classes that didn't interest me, and begin dropping in on the ones that looked interesting.

I didn't have a dorm room, so I slept on the floor in friends' rooms. I returned Coke bottles for the 5 cent deposits to buy food with, and I would walk seven miles across town every Sunday night to get one good meal a week at the Hare Krishna temple. I loved it. And much of what I stumbled into by following my curiosity and intuition turned out to be priceless later on. Here's one example : Reed College offered perhaps the best calligraphy instruction in the country. Because I had dropped out and didn't have to take the normal classes, I decided to take a calligraphy class. I learned about serif and san serif typefaces, about what makes great typography great.

Ten years later, when we were designing the first Macintosh computer, it all came back to me. And we designed it all into the Mac. If I had never dropped in on that course in college the Mac would have never had multiple typefaces or for that matter even proportionally spaced fonts.

Questions :

(1) Why did the narrator stop taking required classes? (1)

(2) Why did the author go to the Hare Krishna temple? (1)

(3) What was Reed College famous for in the country? (1)

(4) What did the author remember while designing Macintosh? (2)

(5) How is a computer useful for your career? (2)

(Change it into indirect speech) (2)

(A) Read the following extract and answer the questions given below : [15] (11)

Brian Carter, gardens and reserves administrator in the inner-city district of South Melbourne, Australia, was frustrated. He'd been trying to interest residents in a tree-planting programme to beautify this dirty, congested neighbourhood of 22,000 people jammed into 15·5 sq. kilometers. But nobody had responded. "You won't get anyone to do anything around here," he was warned again and again as he canvassed for support in the streets and in restaurants. "Nobody cares."

Then, from the heavens, came the answer to his dream. Carter, 33 years old, had barely settled back into his office after a business trip in October 1975 when a gardener barged in. "What are we going to do about that bloody eagle?" he demanded.

"What eagle?" Carter asked.

The gardener pointed out of the window at St. Vincent Place, the two hectare park in which the office was located. "That eagle," he said. "The one sitting in the tree. We've had it there for about four days."

Striding across the park, past the green lawns established by the colonial aristocracy during South Melbourne's days of grandeur, Carter beheld an astonishing sight. Arrogantly and defiantly installed on a perch high in a pine tree was a wedge-tailed eagle. The bird was black, mammoth, regal.

Questions :

(1) Who was Brian Carter? (1)

(2) What did the gardener see in the garden? (1)

(3) How was the eagle? (1)

(4) Why was Brian Carter frustrated? (2)

(5) What would you do to beautify your neighbourhood? How? (2)

(B) Read the following extract carefully and fill the main points and sub-points in the blanks given below : (4)

As you know, energy is the ability to do work. In early times, man depended entirely on his own muscular energy and later supplemented it with that of animals. As man came to rely heavily on horse, ass, ox and camel, he was slowly to discover the use of other natural sources of energy.

There are various kinds of energy all around. Water falling down the hill, the movement of air or the burning fuel – all have one or other kind of energy. The oxidation of food provides muscular energy. The oxidation of fuel provides energy for the steam engine. So we have to get energy from somewhere or the other, but cannot create it.

Matter has two different kinds of energy, the one which is active and the other waiting passively to be used. Water coming down from a waterfall, the weight of the pile-driver coming down or steam expanding in an engine is an example of active energy, which is called 'kinetic energy', by scientists. The other is water in a reservoir or the weight of the pile-driver resting on top of the machine, which are not actively doing work but in a position to do work (passive). Such kind of energy that is stored up and not active is called 'potential energy'. One thing is sure that man and his use of energy is the main reason for the development of machine.

Q. 3. (A) Read the following extract and answer the questions given below : (11)

Rango – leeeeee..., rango – leeeeee — the long intonation repeated again and again in time. I was amazed, for one was hearing it in Bangalore after a very long time. This was the cry that would wake me from my slumber, two decades ago. Sunlight would pour in through the window to light a fresh day, and so would the voice of the rangoli seller. The woman would be on her rounds early morning selling rangoli powder (chalk powder) to be sprinkled in intricate designs in front of homes. It was the duty of the lady of the house to wash the front yard, pick up her bowl of chalk powder, bend double and with deft fingers, dab dots and dashes into an interesting motif. Then, the bowl would be tucked away into a corner, usually on a window sill, and she would vanish indoors to complete her other chores. Rangoli was a must in front of almost all Hindu homes down the lane in our neighbourhood — the sign of welcome, and that the house was ready for the day. We would skip around the designs carefully on our way to and from school so we did not smudge them.

Many mothers down the lane would teach us young girls a few quick sketches. This was how the tradition lived on — from mother to daughter who would then take it forward. On festival days, rangoli would grow bigger in size and more colourful with the sprinkling of petals and flowers for the festive effect. But this is a dying ritual — Today's women are clock-watchers on the move. Their mornings are rushed and there's time for just a quick bite before dashing to work. Rangoli is now reserved only for special occasions. So, the front yards are bare of all adornment.

Questions :

(1) Where does the author live? (1)

(2) What is the significance of rangoli design? (2)

(3) How is rangoli designed on festival days? (2)

(4) Rangoli is a dying ritual. Do you agree with the writer's opinion? Why? (2)

(5) Rewrite the following sentences in the ways instructed :

(i) I was amazed.
(Rewrite it as an exclamatory sentence) (1)

(ii) Sunlight would pour in through the window to light a fresh day.
(Rewrite the sentence using gerund form of the underlined words) (1)

(iii) This was the cry that would wake me from my slumber two decades ago.
(Make it simple) (1)

Q. 4. Read the following extract and answer the questions given below :

In front of my house
Several birds on the tree
Earthen pots in the kitchen
Ant hills in the forest
Now all has become history!

The aangan in front of my door
In that yard, the rangoli
For Nagpanchami baked patoli
Bitter karit fruit for Diwali
Now all has become history!

The neighbours around my house
Those devotees of warmth and affection
Came running at a call
Helped when in need
That's now history, indeed!

The train moved slowly into the station, the engine hissing and sending out waves of steam. As it came to a stop, Satish jumped on the footboard of a lighted compartment and shouted, 'Come on, Arun, this one's empty!' and I picked up my suitcase and made a dash for the open door.

We placed ourselves at the open windows, and the two women stood outside on the platform, talking up to us. Satish's mother did most of the talking.

'Now don't jump on and off moving trains, as you did just now,' she said. 'And don't stick your heads out of the windows, and don't eat any rubbish on the way.' She allowed me to share the benefit of her advice, as she probably didn't think my 'mother' a very capable person. She handed Satish a bag of fruit, a cricket bat and a big box of chocolates, and told him to share the food with me. Then she stood back from the window to watch how my 'mother' behaved.

I was smarting under the patronizing tone of Satish's mother, who obviously thought mine a very poor family, and I did not intend giving the other woman away. I let her take my hand in hers, but I could think of nothing to say. I was conscious of Satish's mother staring at us with hard, beady eyes, and I found myself hating her with a firm, unreasoning hate. The guard walked up the platform, blowing his whistle for the train to leave. I looked straight into the eyes of the woman who held my hand, and she smiled in a gentle, understanding way. I leaned out of the window then, and put my lips to her cheek, and kissed her.

Questions :

(1) When did Satish jump on the footboard of a compartment? (1)

(2) Where did the two women stand? (1)

(3) What did Arun think about Satish's mother? (2)

(B) Composition : (4)

Rewrite the above extract as if Satish is narrating.
